IRVINE, Calif., May 1 /PRNewswire/ -- The Orange County Entrepreneur Community (OCEC) announces its sponsorship of the Rules for Renegades Summit in Irvine, California to support the entrepreneurial revolution! Bill Gates calls her "super high bandwidth." Bill Clinton has thanked her for "fostering American entrepreneurship." Newsweek says "by reputation, Christine is the person you want to partner with." New York Times bestselling author Christine Comaford-Lynch is CEO of Mighty Ventures, a business accelerator which helps businesses to massively increase sales, product offerings, and company value. She has built and sold 5 of her own businesses with an average 700% return on investment, served as a board director or in-the-trenches advisor to 36 startups, and has invested in over 200 startups (including Google) as a venture capitalist or angel investor.

"We have brought together the world's top experts for the Renegades of Orange County," says Christine Comaford-Lynch, CEO of Mighty Ventures. "These individuals have created substantial business success while living fulfilling lives full of meaning. Everyone who attends the Rules for Renegades Summit will learn proven, pragmatic techniques for taking their career and life to the next level."

The OCEC is proud to sponsor the 'Rules For Renegades Summit' and will be hosting an exclusive opportunity to meet with Christine, and other prominent figures in Orange County on the 15th of May, 2008. The founder of the OCEC, Michael Banks said "If you're an entrepreneur with the passion to succeed then this is the event for you." He elaborates, "We help scores of entrepreneurs grow their business and believe everyone should be in business for themselves, just not by themselves." Banks, who also launched the first public eBay drop-off store back in 2000, has decided to auction off sponsorships for the event on the popular auction site.
